KEY

+ Accordion Menu Header

Not an actual page, but a page element; I use this to indicate the labels of different sections of content on the same page, like when inside accordions.

☰ Consumption

A view designed for extended reading, such as an article. Often this is presented as a stack to suggest lots of content that shares an identical form.

☰ Dialog

A modal view. I use this when it's essential to describe an interaction that occurs within a certain page state.

↓ File

A physically downloadable file, like a PDF or an executable program.

Form

Input/output interaction with a system. This could be a basic data entry form or something more AJAX-y.

Listing

A view that presents many links to content, such as tag view, an archive, or search results. It's similar to a Portal, but this is usually more of a utility view.

On-Page Tab

Not an actual new page, but rather 1 of 2 or more tabs containing content within a main navigation page

Portal

A view designed as an doormat for a collection of content. These are usually category pages that usher people deeper into a section. Compared to a Listing, this view is often more curated.
